Marc Harrison, a consultant from Greenwich Associates said, “Our Online Services Benchmarking study is highly regarded in the industry for the in-depth research and analysis that goes into the report. This year’s results show that ACI’s solutions have once again proven their strength and functionality in a highly-competitive market. Expectations from end-users of cash management technology continue to increase, and ACI continues to innovate to meet demands of its bank clients.”

Ralph Dangelmaier, president of the Americas channel at ACI Worldwide said, “The results of this research build on our previous success in this detailed study, and demonstrate the value that we can help banks deliver to their customers. Online services are gaining in importance for businesses of all sizes, and ACI’s consistent results for both mid market and large corporates demonstrate the product’s functionality and flexibility in a cost-effective solution. Our customer base is competing with banks investing significant resources into in-house systems.”

Greenwich Associates conducts its Online Services Benchmarking study to help participants understand the features and functionality of different products in the space, as well as how development priorities compare between vendors. In preparing this study, Greenwich spends more than 20 hours viewing and analyzing each platform using in-person reviews, online demos, user guides, marketing collateral, and subsequent parallel evaluations.

ACI Enterprise Banker allows financial institutions across North America to uniquely package products and services for different markets — or even individual customers — from a single, flexible platform. Enterprise Banker offers a full range of functionality including balance and transaction reporting; ACH and wire transfer origination and reporting; remote check deposit; bill presentment and payment; and cash concentration.
